STAKEHOLDER BRIEF FOR CLASSROOM TEACHERS

This brief is meant for classroom teachers of K–12 history and/or civics. You may teach history and civics as a course or as part of an interdisciplinary team that incorporates civics content and approaches. If you are in this role, this brief is meant to solicit your advocacy and your commitment to educating young people for constitutional democracy by integrating content and instructional practices that reflect the EAD Roadmap and its Pedagogy Companion.

As a classroom teacher, you are the foundation for designing and implementing student learning opportunities across grades K–12, addressing the complex stories that we find in history and civics.

As a classroom teacher, you are the foundation for designing and implementing student learning opportunities across grades K–12, addressing the complex stories that we find in history and civics. To that effect, your commitment to EAD-aligned instruction—that is, instruction that promotes inquiry-based, integrative history and civics instruction across all grade bands—is essential to nurturing students’ democratic development, and therefore strengthening our constitutional democracy. We want you to join a legion of teachers, administrators, community organizations, and district and state leaders—and many more stakeholder groups—in the collective work of providing all students with opportunities to grasp the full and diverse narratives of American life and institutions, past and present, in order to develop a generation of resilient, caring, and informed citizens who will participate, support, and innovate our American constitutional democracy. Additionally, your advocacy should also incorporate the necessary professional learning for you and your colleagues to be successful in implementing the EAD Roadmap.
MAKING THE CASE FOR INTEGRATED HISTORY AND CIVIC EDUCATION

When talking to colleagues, such as fellow teachers or school leaders, you may consider making these points, which are presented and justified in greater detail in the Roadmap:

▸ Strengthening history and civic education is a strategy for preserving and improving America’s constitutional democracy and for addressing specific deficits in our public life, such as hyper-partisanship and false information.

▸ History and civic education have been badly neglected.

▸ Despite deep disagreements in our society as a whole, the EAD Roadmap demonstrates that a consensus exists about the core topics and issues to study in history and civics. That consensus includes an agreement about the deep and worthy disagreements that young Americans should understand and learn to navigate.

▸ All young people deserve an excellent education in history and civics and a curriculum that resonates with their own backgrounds and experiences.

SHIFTING PRACTICE

In addition to your advocacy, the long-term success of EAD requires you to continue doing what you do best—facilitating student learning opportunities that build a supportive and resilient classroom community strengthened through rigorous and courageous inquiries and actions related to our history and civic life. As you do so, it is important that you consult the Roadmap and its Pedagogy Companion, continuously assessing if each lesson’s design aligns with the content themes and design challenges of the Roadmap and reflect the recommended pedagogical practices for history and civics. In the end, we hope that your classroom instruction will model a robust inquiry approach to learning for all students, that provides opportunities for discussions, debates, and democratic experiences within the classroom as well as outside in the community.
